

Headings and Subheadings

Headings and subheadings make a text clearer and easier to read. Headings tell the reader the main topic of the text. Subheadings divide up the text into smaller sections.

1 Put a tick next to the statements that are true.

You should have a new heading for each point.

A heading tells you the main subject of the text.

You can only have one subheading per page.

Subheadings break up a text into smaller sections.

2 Draw lines to link each subheading to the correct section of text.

Headings and subheadings are usually found in non-fiction texts.

Traditional English Foods

Fish and Chips

Eggs, bacon, sausages, beans and toast. Often served all day — not just for breakfast.

Sticky Toffee Pudding

Deep-fried fish served with chips. Usually served as take-away food with salt and vinegar.

English Breakfast

A steamed pudding made with sponge, dates and toffee sauce. Often served with custard.

"I know when to use headings and subheadings."

